LOOKING FOR A FLAT OR FLATMATE can be one of the most stressful things for us busy, thoroughly modern girls about town. But unless you move to London en famille, with Grandma attached to a rocking chair on the roof (a la Beverly Hillbillies), then looking for a potential house sharer is pretty much your only hope of a gaff in the capital. But, as none of us live on ITV2, this genius, new, monthly evening from trendy gay powerhouses Profile and Outlet brings together potential flatmates, tenants (not David) and landlords from all over the city for a cocktail or two. There are a lot of people there who don't know each other, so it's also a great place to mingle and meet someone new - plus, wouldn't it be great to have a hot apartment or house to take a new friend back to, rather than that cardboard box under Waterloo Bridge? What normally takes days, time and effort to be achieved can be done in an hour or two, with a free glass of bubbly to get you going. Best of all, it's absolutely free! For more information and to register, head over to www.speedflatdating.com - the next event is on Wednesday 9th June. I already have somewhere fabulous to live, so if you see a randy QX reporter there, I'm just perving on you...
